

GLSTC Annual Meeting

March 15, 2017

Join Great Lakes Safety to hear Dr. Todd Conklin, a nationally-recognized speaker, safety consultant and author, speak on the Human Performance program. His presentation will include ideas on how to make changes from what is considered the traditional views of safety concerns, which are becoming outdated and ineffective, to the new Human Performance view which is creating excitement and new energy in the safety fields and where “failure” is redefined.

Todd Conklin holds a Ph.D. in organizational behavior from the University of New Mexico. He spent 25 years at Los Alamos National Laboratory as a Senior Advisor for Organizational and Safety Culture. He has been working on the Human Performance program for 15 of those years.

Conklin defines safety at his workplace like this: “Safety is the ability for workers to be able to do work in a varying and unpredictable world.” He thinks that Human Performance is the most meaningful work he has ever had the opportunity to live and teach.
